Resolution Process Overview

This is a high-level overview of the full process. Resolution options and other procedural details will vary based on when the reported incident occurred and whether the respondent (person being accused) is a student, faculty member, or staff member. You can find more information on our website or by contacting us to schedule a time to speak.

Your Rights in the Resolution Process

If you have been named in a complaint of discrimination or harassment, some of the rights you have in the process include:

- To be treated with respect by University officials throughout the process.
- To be free from retaliation.
- To request to have the matter resolved using a less formal resolution process (Conflict Resolution or Administrative Resolution). Note: Informal resolution options may not be appropriate for all matters and both parties must voluntarily agree to the proposed option.
- To have a support person accompany you throughout the process. If you are a student who does not have a Support Person and would like one, you may submit a request to the Office of Institutional Equity. Upon receipt of your request, the Office of Institutional Equity may assign a trained Support Person to you.
- Access to applicable University resources and support, to include supportive and confidential resources and reasonable supportive measures.
- The right to respond to each allegation and present relevant evidence, including the names of potential witnesses.
- To receive amnesty for minor student misconduct, at the discretion of the Title IX Coordinator.
- The right to file a report or Formal Complaint if you believe you have experienced harassment or discrimination.
